

Alberta game branch moves to improve elk situation

Staring elk in Alberta forest reserves have prompted the Alberta government's game branch to start a land management program to improve the herd movement to settled areas and reduce the number of elk that die each winter.

As the first step in the project, all elk in the Crown's New and Crown Forests in the southwestern Alberta have been counted.

Experts say there are too many elk in the area and that the herd is suffering from natural deficits, making five hundred elk a year. The game branch is now studying the elk population of elk, winter feed, habitat, and the effects of hunting on the herd. The game branch is also studying the effects of hunting on the herd. The game branch is also studying the effects of hunting on the herd.

Successful in U.S.

With a direct land management program, land ownership in the United States has been successful in creating a smaller elk population than at present. Eventually there will be a better grazing condition.

Field days show tillage machines in operation

There have been dozens of farmers and students of agriculture, writers and operators of tillage machines. These are not half as convincing as actually seeing results of soil comparing the work done in the field.

To bring this information directly to the farmer who is interested, the Agricultural Engineering section of the Alberta Department of Agriculture Extension Service is sponsoring a series of field days on April 30 and May 1, 1964.

The field days will be held in the following locations: (1) Lethbridge, (2) Calgary, (3) Edmonton, (4) Regina, (5) Saskatoon, (6) Winnipeg, (7) Brandon, (8) Swift Current, (9) Moose Jaw, (10) Regina,
